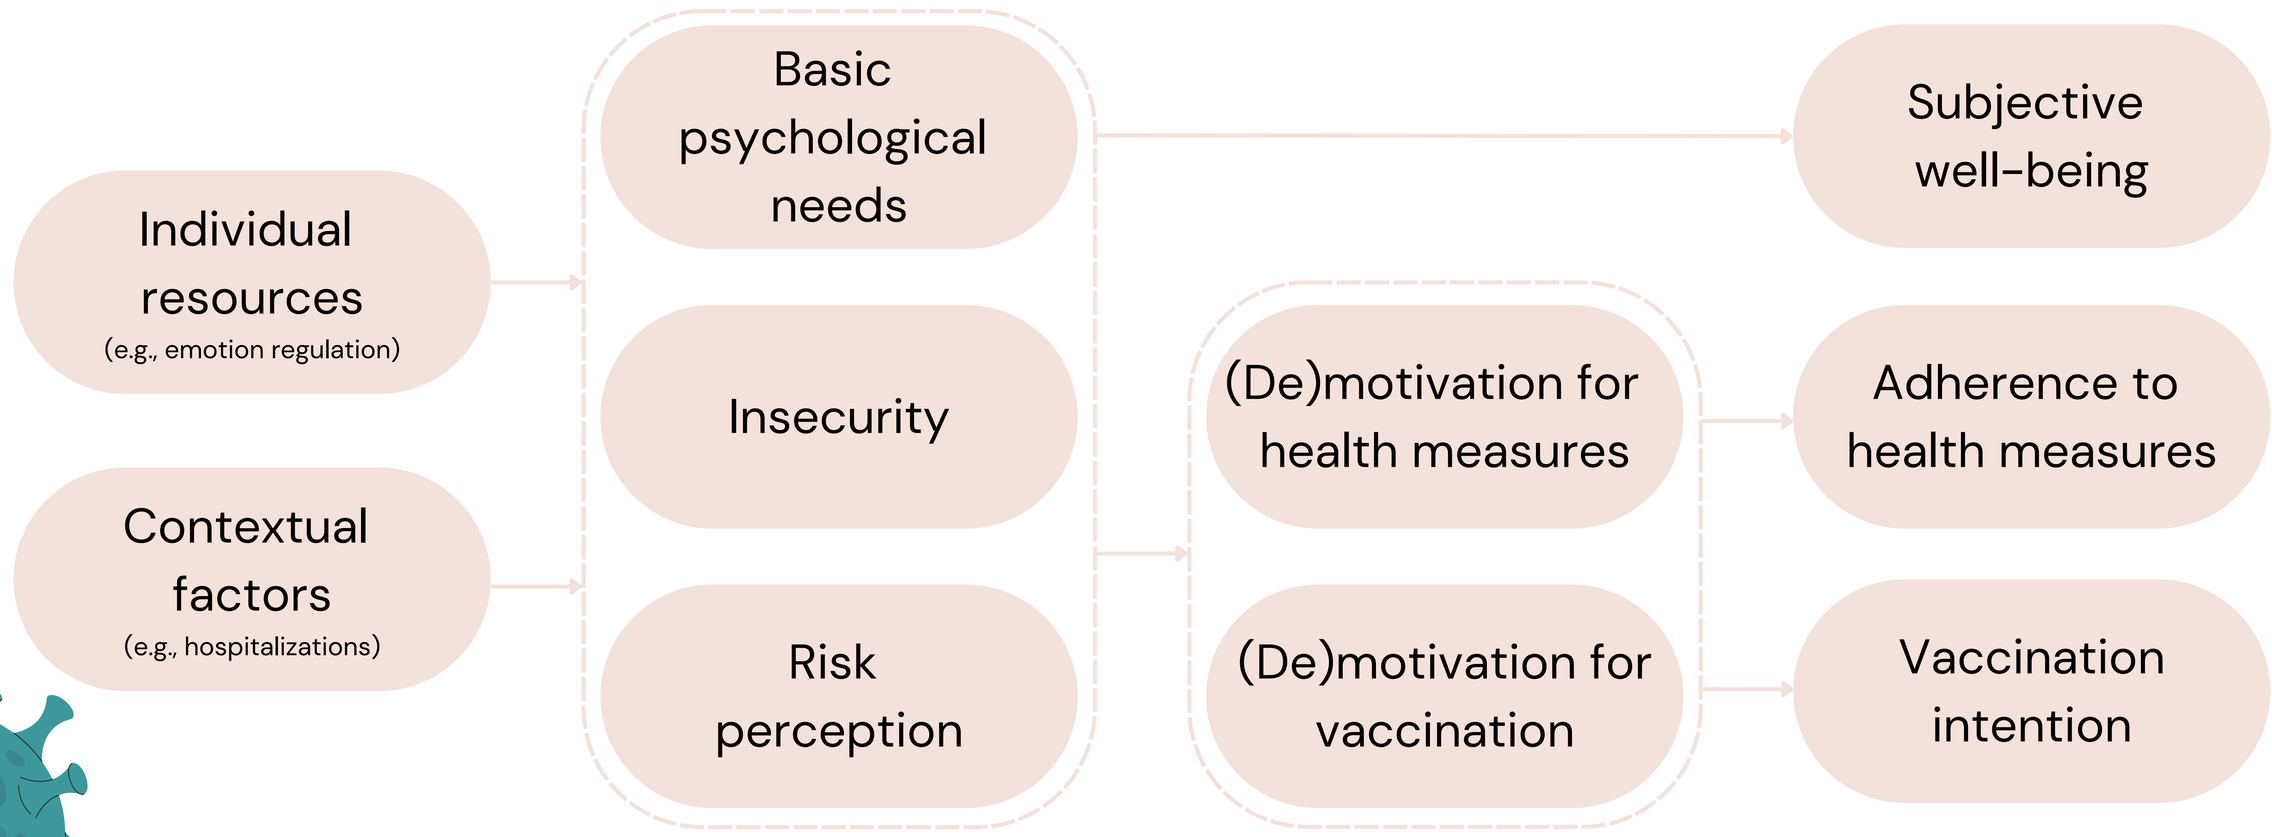
An In-depth Investigation of the Role of Motivation and Need-based Experiences in Predicting Behavior and Well-being during the COVID-19 Crisis in Belgium

Motivation BAROMETER

Joachim Waterschoot, Prof. Dr. Maarten Vansteenkiste, & Prof. Dr. Bart Soenens

Prof. Dr. Rudi De Raedt, Prof. Dr. Kou Murayama , Prof. Dr. Stijn van Petegem

Aims of the project



Methodology

Who?

- 483,778 surveys (110 moments)
- 77% Dutch, 23% French
- Mage = 50.4 years
- 64% female
- 35% vaccinated
- 32% no education/secondary, 36% Bachelor degree, 32% Master degree

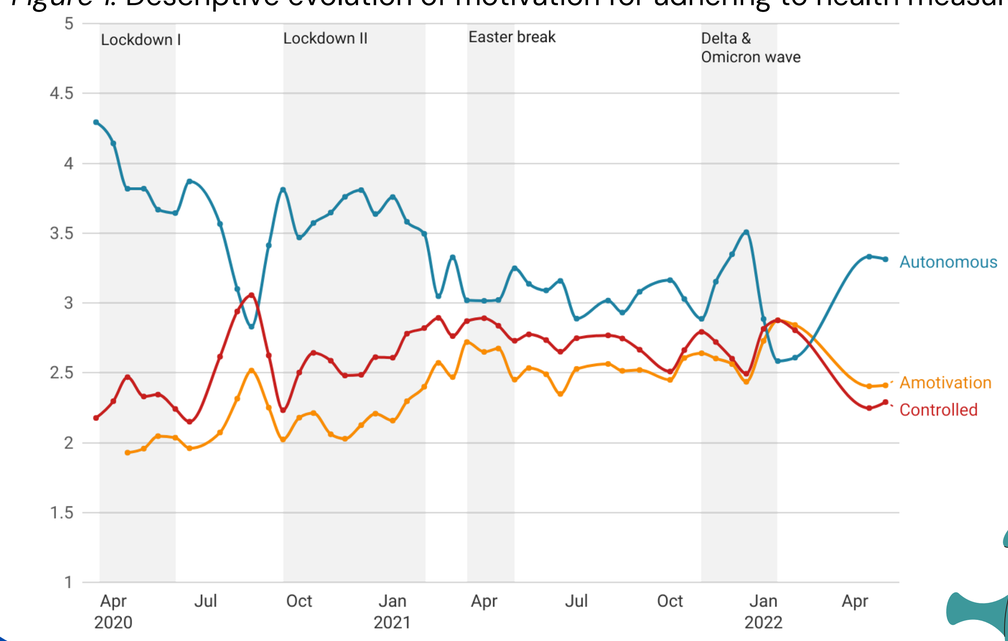
How? Through social media and newspapers

When? March 2020 - October 2022

Type of designs:
Cross-sectional, cohort-based, longitudinal, vignette-based

Type of analyses:
linear (mixed) regressions, multilevel SEM, time series, Latent Change models

Figure 1. Descriptive evolution of motivation for adhering to health measures



Scientific and societal purposes

1. Psychological needs and insecurity play unique roles in subjective well-being.
2. Both objective contextual features and risk perception predict the quality of motivation ...
3. ... which matters for adherence to health measures and vaccination intention.

The ongoing monitoring of motivation and well-being is relevant for policy and society

GHENT UNIVERSITY

motivationbarometer.com

FACULTY OF PSYCHOLOGY AND EDUCATIONAL SCIENCES